

Education During Ramadan and Beyond

As Ramadan draws near, in what seems to be a unique year we still find solace during this time to reflect, contemplate, and transform.

It is undeniable that a God-centred curriculum has a positive effect on our intellectual and spiritual growth, yet as the young are naturally eager to absorb knowledge of The Creator, and as our youth question the purpose for learning whilst looking for guidance, they are met with secular studies deprived of The Almighty.

Should we be surprised with the frustration and lack of motivation? Their innate love for learning has been stripped away, by separating The One, who blessed us with it to begin with.

Not all hope is lost though, curiosity may be renewed by the removal of a god-less, spoon-fed syllabus, and replacing it with something better. We encourage parents to break away from materials specifically written for the delivery of the national curriculum and establishing an environment to produce self-motivated, life-long learners during Ramadan and beyond.

We are able to surpass standards set by the state authority to educate without compromising on our universal beliefs, and It is perfectly legal to utilise moral developing, and thought provoking materials which may cause a deep appreciation of your Lord!

You may measure the quality of sources used for qualitative education by asking; 'Am I moved by the words I am reading or hearing?' And if not, know there are exceptional alternatives that place God at the centre, are parent-educator friendly, and require no formal training.

It may seem daunting, but all parents are teachers! Please seek advice from experienced and committed home educators to make best use of these resources. You may also email us to schedule a personalised consultation.

We look forward to supporting and uniting with the community for future workshops, excursions and parent presentations, In Sha Allah.

May Allah ^{سُبْحَانَكَ اللَّهُمَّ وَبِحَمْدِكَ} make your home education journey rewarding and may you reap the fruits of your labour in this world and in the hereafter.

Ramadan Mubarak to you and your family.
